CAREER ENHANCEMENT FELLOWSHIPS AWARDED TO JUNIOR AND ADJUNCT FACULTY Fellowship provides stipends, mentors to support tenure progress, strengthen pipeline to the professoriate

PRINCETON, N.J. (March 20, 2017)— Today, the Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation has announced the names of 30 new Career Enhancement Fellows—10 junior faculty members who will receive 12-month Fellowship and 20 who will receive six-month Fellowships. Also announced today were the second class of Career Enhancement Adjunct Faculty Fellows.

This year's Fellows are working in an array of fields including English, critical dance studies, history, Mexican American and Latino/a studies, sociology, music, American studies, and philosophy. They represent some of the nation's top institutions. (Full list of Fellows, institutions, and departments below.)

The Career Enhancement Fellowship, funded by the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation and administered by the Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation, creates career development opportunities for selected faculty fellows with promising research projects. The program provides Fellows with a six-month or one-year sabbatical stipend (up to $30,000); a research, travel, or publication stipend (up to $1,500); mentoring; and participation in a late summer professional development retreat.

The Career Enhancement retreat, an integral part of the program, provides opportunities for Fellows to meet at length with mentors they have selected—senior academics who help advise these early-career faculty on next steps in professional development. Fellows also have the opportunity to connect with Career Enhancement Fellows from past years and other special guest scholars.

This also marked the second year for the Career Enhancement Adjunct Faculty Fellowship, which seeks to increase the presence of Mellon Mays Undergraduate Fellows (MMUF)—promising scholars previously supported by Mellon Foundation grants—among tenure-track faculty in core fields of the humanities and social sciences. Fellows are awarded a six-month stipend (up to $10,000) and matched with a mentor and small professional network of tenured former Career Enhancement Fellows.

Administered at the Woodrow Wilson Foundation since 2001, the Career Enhancement Fellowship has supported nearly 370 junior faculty members over the past 17 years. The program seeks particularly to increase the presence of junior faculty members who are underrepresented in their fields, as well as other faculty members committed to eradicating racial disparities in core fields in the arts and humanities.
